

An Austin Classic, Now Made to Stay

Ask around Austin, and nearly everyone has a Green Pastures story: a holiday brunch, a wedding reception, a family milestone, a company event, or a peacock appearing right on cue.

Since 1946, the estate has belonged to many versions of the city at once: neighborhood regulars, visiting musicians, festival guests, business travelers, and families returning year after year. Now, with the arrival of The Inn at Green Pastures, there is a new way into the story.

Set on the historic grounds of the original 1895 home, The Inn brings a 63-room boutique hotel to one of Austin's most storied addresses. The experience feels polished but not precious — quietly residential, deeply rooted, and unmistakably local. Carved away beneath the live oaks in Bouldin Creek, the property feels removed from the city without actually leaving it, just moments from the energy of South Congress and downtown.

Mattie's continues the estate's long tradition of gracious dining with seasonal menus and a setting that feels both elegant and lived-in. Henry's Nite & Day adds a newer rhythm: coffee in the morning, cocktails by golden hour, wine, beer, and elevated fare that carries easily from breakfast to late evening.

The Inn turns Green Pastures into a full stay. Come for dinner at Mattie's, stay for a golden-hour cocktail at Henry's, wander beneath the oaks, and wake up in one of the city's most storied settings.

Guest rooms and suites are warm, refined, and connected to the landscape, while the estate's ballroom, private dining spaces, lawns, and historic corners make gatherings feel at once effortless and memorable.

Close to the city's defining moments—SXSW, ACL Festival, Formula 1 weekends, downtown meetings, creative offices, and long evenings out—Green Pastures is ultimately defined by contrast. After the pace of Austin, it offers somewhere quieter to return to. theinnatgreenpastures.com

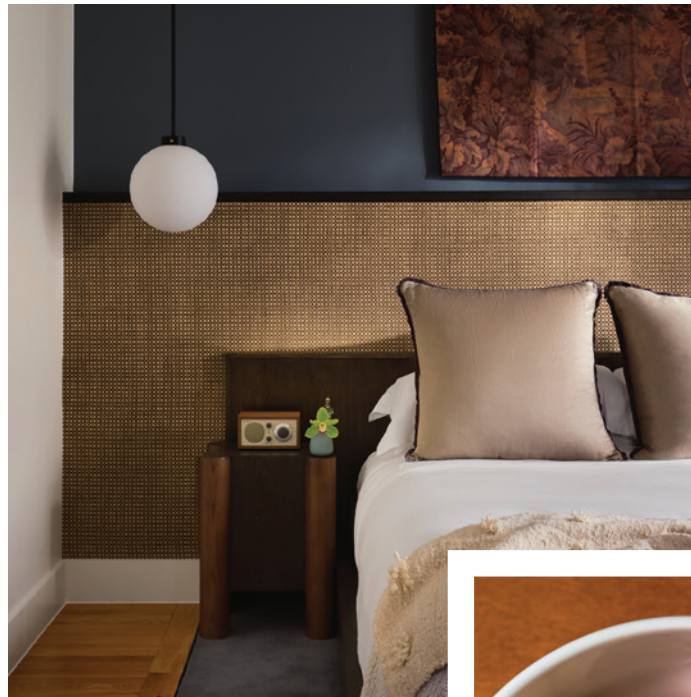

PHOTO CREDITS: CASEY DUNN, JESSICA STEPHENS, ALLEN DANIEL AND AUSTON MARLBOROUGH